

Professional Coaching and Interview Preparation

I can help you become the benchmark against which all other candidates are measured. Your next job interview is closer than you think. Do you want to become a professional interviewee? Or, do you want to get hired?

If going on a job interview has ever felt like part investigation, part audition, and part first date, that's because it is. Preparing for a job interview is difficult. You can research for hours, rehearse every answer, even have a strong relationship inside the firm but still have no guarantee that you will emerge as the clear candidate of choice. No matter how confident a speaker, how well-honed your skill set, or how well connected you are to the hiring team, there are many other factors to be weighed and measured before a decision about your candidacy is made. How do you engage, connect, and generate lasting interest with the hiring manager? Good question, because that's what you need to do to earn the job you want, and that's where I can help.

The Sport of Kings

When did the job search become such a horse race? Despite what you believe to be true, being the first out of the gate doesn't always offer a competitive advantage. With so many talented professionals jockeying for position, narrowing the field to the best and brightest is both a challenge and a dream for the hiring manager. You know you are the best candidate, and yet when interviewing evolves into a process of exclusion, getting a second round seems as elusive as winning the lottery. It has never been more difficult to land a great job. What is your value proposition? Do you know why you are the best person for the job? Great! Now, do you know how to convince the Founder of the company?

Natural Selection vs. Survival of the Fittest

You need to protect your time and invest yourself in the right opportunities. Do you know how to properly vet a company and position before committing to an interview? Do you know what questions to ask to garner the right information and develop a strategic position in any stage of a search? Do you know when and how to follow up on an interview, when you lack an intermediary, without alienating the company? If you answered yes to all of these, then you're doing a lot right. Congratulations! So, why are you still on the market?

You, only better prepared.

As a professional, seasoned Search Consultant with 10 years of recruiting experience, I have invested hundreds of hours in the preparation and fine tuning of my candidate's interview processes. Working one-on-one with Managers and C-level professionals from a variety of industries, the focus on developing a personal brand, search strategy, and approach has positioned my clients for success in the most challenging job market of our time.

Karen Biscoe, CPC
Green Search Partner
Office: 1.781.523.1906
Mobile: 1.781.534.3603
karen@greensearchpartner.com

GREEN SEARCH PARTNER
Finding the Un-findable Talent

Interview Consulting Services

Interview preparation is available in one, three, and five hour increments. One and three hour sessions are best utilized in one day. Five hour sessions can be split over two or three days.

Resume Writing Services

Putting your best foot forward starts with getting your resume in the hands of the hiring manager. While I cannot guarantee your resume will land on the top of the pile, I can guarantee you the reader will be impressed with the person it represents.

Resume Creation:
$300.00 (no hour allocation)

Resume Overhaul:
$175.00 (no hour allocation)

